WE KNOW

How You Stood Bravely and Firmly For The Right.

For These Things and Things Like These we Wish to Thank You.

The great effort of Mr. Crossland in this campaign has been to bring the District committee under the tongue of disrepute. Because the set of resolutions he offered were not endorsed by the committee, he has sought to play the bull in a china shop. When not abusing the party organization he has put in his time attempting to belittle and decry the well known, valuable and highly appreciated services of Mr. James for his party. He has succeeded in doing the one thing about as well as he has in the other. The people of this state and this district are too well versed in recent political history to be led astray by a man who shows interest in his party only when an office is to be filled. As Mr. Crossland's policy is to pull down others, rather than to build himself up, and as he will doubtless redouble his efforts along this line as the election draws near, the following letter is apropos; coming from those nearest and dearest the lamented Goebel, it shows the value placed on Mr. James' ability and services by that great friend of the people, our late Governor:

Cincinnati, O., May 7, 1901.—Hon. O. M. James, Marion, Ky.—My Dear Sir: I beg at this late date, in the name of my brother Justus and myself, to thank you for your gallant devotion to and valuable services for the cause of our brother William Goebel. We know, as all know, how ably you represented the cause of the candidate from your end of the state, before and during the Louisville Convention; but we also know and appreciate how promptly and loyally, when the convention made its choice, you pledged your unalloyed support to William Goebel. We know how, in the name of the party, he called upon you during the campaign, and appreciate how you opened that campaign in the Seventh congressional district, throughout it stumped the entire state in his behalf, and closed it in company with him at Louisville; how, at the count in Louisville, surrounded by a hired mob, you with but few others stood your ground for the party's sake and his sake. When at the dictates of his party he finally consented to contest, we know how at the mere suggestion of the great value of your services by him you promptly volunteered without charge your services throughout that contest, and stood bravely and firmly for the right, undeterred and undismayed by that mountain army upon crime and murder bent. For these things and things like these, we wish to thank you. You live far from us at the other end of the state, but across the distance we wish to grasp your hand, and convey to you that feeling of gratitude which mere words do not express.

Believe me, ever and in truth your friend, (Signed) Arthur Goebel.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RACE.

BY A YOUNG LADY ADMIRER OF OLLIE M. JAMES.

Our Democratic Committee met With true and pure intention; And decided on a primary Instead of a convention. They set the time they thought best To hold the primary election, And they thought would please voters In every town and section.

A LOYAL DEMOCRAT!

ABLE, CLEAN AND AGGRESSIVE.

Vote for Him in the Congressional Primary Election Saturday, May 24.

Gentlemen, it is an easy matter to assail the services of a man for his party, but allow me to say to you that I have fought your battles from Seamander to the sea. I made more speeches for Goebel than any other Democrat in Kentucky. In every fierce campaign, in every district in your State I have borne the banner of my party. The Democratic State Committee called upon me to go by the side of your brave young Governor, and, at this call of the party, I went from one end of the State to the other, in the fiercest campaign in yours and my time, calling the Democratic hosts to rally to the rescue of our beloved State. In this good county of Trigg, I have stood as your champion against the carpet bagger from other parts of the State. You may say to me, "James, it is true, all this you have done, you have borne the heat and burden of the day while your opponent in this contest was resting under the shade of the tree; you have never failed to respond to our call, and to the call of the party throughout the State, when its banner was in peril; you never held a public office, but notwithstanding all this we are going to forget you and give these honors to your opponent, we will trample under foot the ambition of your life and give the office to one who has already been given a moderate fortune in the way of emoluments of office."

While you may do this, I do not believe you will, and I do not come with any cringing appeal, I stand upon my services and my merits, humble as they are, and boys, let me say treat me as you will, if any Phillistine ever come before the "army of the lord" in defiance, and the old banner needs a defender, call for Ollie James and he will defend it.—Extract from Mr. James' speech at Cadiz Monday.

But Crossland kicked up quite a row,
With tongue and gestures flying,
Vowed he'd right such dreadful wrongs
Or else he'd die a-trying.
And he is great on making speeches,
Of this we have no doubt;
For when he's short on argument
He can "cuss" the whole thing out.

Ollie James we know is youthful,
And though of "massive frame"
His mind is deep and brilliant
And he'll "get there all the same."
He is of the common people,
And will work for what they need,
He's noble, pure and generous
And free from spite and greed.

When old Kentucky needed help
Our enemies to quell,
Who was it worked both night and day
And did his work so well?
Whose voice was heard in clarion tones
With every patriot breath,
Who vowed he'd lead our hosts along
To victory or to death?

It was our gallant Ollie James
Who helped the fight to win,
With noble mein and burning words
He put young Beckham in,
He has proved his faith and loyalty
By words and deeds that told,
As attorney, chairman, counselor,
He was bright, and true and bold.

While Mr. Crossland stayed at home,
To help he did not try,
But now holds up his empty hands
And wants them filled with pie.
He comes before the public now,
And we think it is a sin,
For him to ask good democrats
For spoils he did not win.

Then rise, ye common yeomanry
Who daily till the soil,
And put down aristocracy
Who spurn your honest toil.
Send Ollie James to Congress,
A man who will do right,
Whose "massive frame" is always found
In the thickest of the fight.

AN OLD STORY.

Crossland Out Electioneering More Than a Year Ago.—The Newspaper Attack Upon James and How it Rebounded.

A big crowd heard the candidate for Congress speak at Cadiz Monday. As Mr. Crossland is still pursuing his tactics of attacking the Democratic committee, the following extract from Mr. James' speech are interesting:

Solomon, the wisest of men, said "O that mine enemy would write a book," and now I would paraphrase that sentence and say: "O that mine enemy would write a circular." My friend, Mr. Crossland, has issued this circular, as big as a barn door, assailing the Democratic organization of this district. One by one I have taken up his complaints, until I have driven him to the wall upon every assault he made. The truth of it is, Mr. Crossland has been prosecuting so long, that he had to have somebody to jump on, so he jumped on the Democratic committee. That committee has acted and I bow to its action, and, as I have defended the Democratic party against the assaults of Republicans and bolters in days gone by, I shall not fail to defend it now.

We find him saying in his circular that he did not know what amount would be charged as an entrance fee in the primary and intimating that he might be forced out by an exorbitant entrance fee, but how quickly this falls to the ground, when his part of the expenses for holding the primary is known to be less than $300. And I assert here now, as I have done before, and he has not and will not deny it, that there has never been a primary held in any district in the United States in equal size, at a less expense. So there this deceptive cry falls to the ground.

We next hear him saying in his circular, which I quote literally, "I, supposing that I would not be cut off from an opportunity of seeing the people, but would be afforded the same chances that were accorded Stone, Hendrick and Wheeler, had not gone among the people never thinking that the committee would undertake to stifle their voice by calling off a canvass."

That is what he said to the people in that circular; he signed his name to it. He scattered thousands of them broadcast over the district. Now fellow Democrats, is this true? I charge that he has been a candidate for more than two years. I charge that he has been actively canvassing for months. Can I prove it? Let us see. On August 7, 1901, the Calloway Times says:

"Sam Crossland, candidate for Congress, was mixing with friends here Monday. He is the only candidate on this side of the river and he thinks he ought to have a good many votes in Calloway."

Here we find him in this big Democratic county almost a year ago as a candidate. Again, we find him in Hickman county more than twelve months ago, as I show by the following statement from Robt. L. Smith, mayor of the city of Clinton, and ex-county attorney, and one of the best Democrats in that county:

CLINTON, Ky., May 5, 1902.
This is to certify that Samuel H. Crossland came into my office on the 30th day of April, 1901, and told me that he was a candidate for Congress in this district, and wanted my support, and I said to Sam, "it is a little early aint it?" and he said, "yes, but I want to be ready early." The 30th day of April, 1901 was the day they hung a negro here, and the largest crowd was here that was ever seen in Clinton, and Mr. Crossland was here mixing with that large crowd.

ROBERT L. SMITH.

We next find him in Ballard county, as shown by the following, which he admits:

This is to certify that Sam H. Crossland was in my tobacco patch last Sept. electioneering with me for congress. J. M. Skinner.

This May 10, 1902
This is to certify that Sam H. Crossland came to me in Wickliffe in April, 1901, and electioneered with me for congress.

M. F. Billington.
Both Mr. Skinner and Mr. Billington are gentlemen of the highest character and standing in their community. I charged these things on him in their presence, and he did not deny them, but admitted that they were true. Now, I submit to the fair minded voters is it true that he had never gone among the voters in the interest of his candidacy, or rather is it not a fact from all this proof that his assault upon the committee is unwarranted, unfair and insincere; and are we not forced to say of him—

"O how tangled is the web he weaves,"
A paper down here at Mayfield that has sprung forth with a campaign edition, uses this language of me in its editorial column:

"He gets the committees to invite him to make speeches; he asks and generally gets them to pay his expenses, collected from good stay at home Democrats."

Here is an attempt to discredit my Democracy and to impugn my motive in my efforts for party success in the past, and it not only touches me but is an insinuation upon the sincerity and honesty of purpose of illustrious Democrats of bygone days in this district in the State. Let us see if this insidious, half concealed attack, strikes me or if it rebounds upon the individual who seeks advantage without testing the ground upon which he stands. When this charge was made I intended that it should be answered by those who had acted as chairmen of the party in the years gone by. I sent the following telegram to Senator J. C. S. Blackburn:

Marion, Ky., April 4, 1902.—Charges are made that the campaign committee, of which you were chairman in 1899, paid my expenses to campaign the state. Is this true? Answer.

Ollie M. James.
A similar telegram was sent to the other gentlemen whose answers I have and here they are:

Washington, D. C., 4-5, 1902.—Hon Ollie M. James, Marion, Ky.: Committee did not pay your expenses in 1899, nor any part of same, and no man rendered greater service.

J. C. S. Blackburn.
I sent a like telegram to Senator elect James B. McCreary, and in reply received the following:

Richmond, Ky., 4-4, 1902.—Ollie James, Marion, Ky.: You never asked me to pay your expense in the campaign of 1900. To my knowledge the campaign committee never paid any part of your campaign expenses.

James B. McCreary.
I sent a like telegram to Hon. H. A. Summers, who was chairman in 1896, and received the following reply:

Elizabethtown, Ky., April 4, 1902.—Ollie James, Marion, Ky.: Speeches you made in 1896 were made without compensation.

H. A. Summers.
I then sent a telegram to Gov. J. C. W. Beckham and received the following reply:

Frankfort, Ky., April 5, 1902.—Hon Ollie M. James, Marion, Ky.: The committee did not pay your expenses in campaign of 1901. No man in Kentucky rendered the party more distinguished and valuable service than you did.

J. C. W. Beckham.
I suppose this will be a sufficient answer to the assault made upon me in this regard.

YOUNGSTER CRAWLS IN MY BED

There's a half-mothered sawn from the
cut where he lies.
Supposed to be soundly asleep.
His chubby brown fists rub the "sand"
from his eyes.
And the covers fly off in a heap.
His bare little feet strike the floor with a whack.
They race like a young thoroughbred.
They slide like two fishes over my back.
As the youngster crawls into my bed.

"Hey, puppie!" his cheery tones ring in my ear.
While his hand gives my nose a sharp
twack.
"I've come on a visit, I say, do you hear?
Why don't you turn over and speak?
With a counterpane snore like a host from a born."
I pretend that my ears are lead.
But he laughs my most consummate acting to scorn.
When this youngster crawls into my bed.

"Now tell me a story, please, puppie," pleads he.
A gruff, growling protest I make.
I am too badly tired to give him A B C.
And my brain's but a frazzled wire.
But growling and snoring his wifery
him.
"You a bear are you?" Just good ahead
And I'll be a billy goat—billy goat—billy goat!
And he butts me half out of the bed.

He snuggles at my pillow like a dove.
He snuggles against my warm breast.
And cooing up his ear for the "Once on a time."
That ushers in all of the rest.
Of the Mother Goose lullaby and the storybook lore.
And the yawn I spill out of my head.
And when I am pumped dry, I say: "Please tell me some more."
When the youngster crawls into my bed.

After stories galore, they are making play
With happiness that has no end.
"What floor, puppie, has my grandpa lived in?"
"Oh, puppie, 'tween the two great pillars."
Then he snuggles at my pillow with a snuggly
snuggly.
His little feet strike the floor with a snuggly
snuggly.
When the youngster crawls into my bed.

But he's not at all tired, for he's There's a half-mothered sawn from the
cut where he lies.
Supposed to be soundly asleep.
His chubby brown fists rub the "sand"
from his eyes.
And the covers fly off in a heap.
His bare little feet strike the floor with a
whack.
They race like a young thoroughbred.
They slide like two fishes over my back.
As the youngster crawls into my bed.

THE WOOLING
OF CELESTE.

BY JOHN H. RAFTERY.

Miss Celeste came to Cold Harbor
in the early spring to work out a "little scheme" which seemed in harmony both with her business necessities and her aristocratic instincts. For she was of gentle blood and much nature, though driven by an insatiable destiny to support her widowed mother and herself by the precarious drudgery of drawing lessons. Her unseasonable advent to the little summer resort was prompted by the idea that she might establish her studio and her fame before the rush of the "resorters" commenced, and so gain for herself and her mother a sojourn by the lake that would be impossible under other conditions.

Mamma, whose head was quite full of romantic, impracticable and unwarranted notions about Celeste's future, treated the young woman as a plebeian tiring maid might serve a princess of the blood. The old lady, chattering everlastingly of "better days," constituted herself a willing but dictatorial servant of all works and spoiled her pretty daughter to the top of her bent. Therefore it is not surprising that Celeste, who was 25, dressed her pretty figure in the style of a debutante, ate her morning muffin and sipped her breakfast chocolate in bed, spent more money for her fancy lingerie than many an heiress and changed her gloves oftener than her ingenious parent could change
the dinner bill of fare.

When they came into the boxlike cottage late in March they contrived to convince one another that it was quite "romantic." The surf thundered on the tawny sands only a few hundred yards from their back door and the west wind crooned in their stuffy little attic like the spirit voices of the waters. After putting a notice of her coming in the local paper, hanging out her card and disposing her piano, drawing-boards and pictures about the tiny cottage, Miss Celeste found leisure in some novel reading and opportunity to keep warm by lying abed while mamma petted her and fussed about the kitchen. From revels in the delirious glories of about a dozen impossible love stories, Celeste naturally plunged into the more approximate possibilities of the approaching season of gayety and imagined some very pretty romances,
in which she herself was the heroine,
and some bruno demi-god with a preposterous bank account was the sighing hero.

The first warm day found her in this mood sitting on the davenport by the window of her boudoir and gazing across the watercourse that soon must become the playground of a swarm of fashions. Then she noticed that the adjacent cottage was no more than it had seemed. She was preparing the drawback to her mother when she saw a tall, athletic, handsome young fellow striding gracefully across the sand to the objectionable house. She drew the curtain across her window, but watched him with brightening eyes as he stepped upon the creaking porch, let himself in and vanished like the impalpable vision of her romantic dreams. Was he, could he be the Prince Charming, come so soon, and yet not too soon to lead her from the dreary cobwebbed cave of her long maidenly sleep?
Her heart was pre-pating like the little trip-hammers of a parallel valve suddenly from the open window of the cottage—his cottage—there stole a strain of music so deep, so rich, so unmistakably plaintive that the tears sprang into her big blue eyes as she cried:

"Mamma, listen! He is playing!"
(Accented on the E-flat.)
"What is he?" rasped mamma, securing a skirt, but coming to the window.

"Why, the young gentleman who lives next door," replied Celeste.
"Have you seen him?"
Then they listened breathlessly to the melody now swelling with noble effort, now subsiding with a soft lament and again shrilling sadly into the tune of a sad complaint. It was a cello played by a master hand, vocal with the passion of the adept, responsive to every hope and fantasy of an aspiring and perhaps wounded heart. When the music ceased, Celeste sighed, wondering who he might be, and how he might with a thrilling glimpse of his astun-gingly beautiful person, so to move her heart with the rank in expression of some poetic passion.

That, as if by chance, she wondered to her window and with an eye but abstractedly played a last note little dreaming of "Rigoletto." But when she had finished and her in-conscious challenge was answered by a mournful, pleading echo from the same opera, Celeste gasped, prettily and ran to the window, pulling it shut with a very dramatic little shrug of anger. Then she ran into the attic, fixed herself at the eyehole and window and watched the cello's cottage like a pretty bird which has been terrified and fascinated by a prowling and majestic hawk. In an hour he came out, and—how her heart beat!
—turned his dark, soulful eyes for a full minute toward her window. He could not see her, and so he walked away, but she watched him with her heart in her eyes, till he disappeared
in the garden of the Hotel Florence.

That evening she noticed an old man, bearded, shabby and bent, pottering about the back door of the celloist's cottage, and interested in everything and everyone with whom her hero came in contact, she wondered who the privileged old dependent might be.
"He can't be a relative," she thought; "he's a vulgar, ill-looking old rascal. Perhaps an old servant of the family, endured by his young master for the sake of old times."
And she was dreaming another day dream when he, handsomer than ever, came across the stretch of sand, and with just a glance toward her, went into the cottage. She heard his melodious voice call "Boggs! Boggs!"
and watched the old servant scurry into the back door. Then after an interval the cello spoke once more, sweeter, bolder, more winsome than ever. And from her piano she answered it in kind, her courage rising as the response came floating promptly back through the open window, her heart a-fire as she interpreted the impassioned meaning of the old ballad of love and war, the songs, eloquent of laughter and tears, which the unseen player tossed back at her through the deepening night.

After that she tried in her demure, maidenly way to meet him in the village streets, but though she saw him often and once almost came face to face with him at a corner near the post office, he seemed to evade her with an ingenious confusion that enhanced his exalted character in her partial eyes. No doubt he could not trust himself to look freely at her patrician beauty; he must have recognized the innate nobility of her poise and bearing; aristocrat that he was, he would not presume upon the opportunities even of a lovely summer resort to gain her acquaintance unconventionally. At her wits' end for some plausible subterfuge, poor Celeste was at last obliged to confide, tentatively and cautiously, of course,

in her mother. "I'll borrow something from Boggs," cried the old lady,
"and then I'll invite them to tea!"
It was a happy thought and bore quick fruit, for that afternoon the widow ran home with a row light in her eyes and said: "It's done, Celeste!
I didn't borrow a cup of sugar, they don't drink or eat in the cottage, but live, that is, at the Hotel Florence.
Oh, they must be rich. The old gentleman, Boggs, is his uncle. The nephew's name is B. Ford, Porter Bel-ford, and they're coming over this evening!"

They came, the old man toddled out in a rusty suit of black and the nephew a dapper but handsome. If she had not been already in love poor Celeste might have wondered at Bel-ford's awkwardness, the limitations of his conversation, the limitations of the evident good-nature of Uncle Boggs. But she could see no deeper than his splendid beauty, hear nothing but the rich harmony of his rich voice, think of nothing but the won-derous mass of her dreamed-of cello.
And so, as they were about to leave the table and the talk was languishing, Celeste turned to her idol and cooed wonderfully.

"Certainly," he answered, without blushing. "Boggs got the cello."

Boggs not only brought the instrument, but, with so much as an invitation, sat down to play it. Celeste could scarcely force a word of praise
when the old fellow, snuggling loudly at the cello and a shawl, and down the instrument and grunted at mamma like some ancient ape. The girl turned quickly to Belford and murmured:

"Now, you'll play, won't you, Mr.
Belford?"

"I? Why, no, I—"

"For my sake," Celeste was whispering, but mamma took in with an astute eye, which was the bashful young man's look, as a girl.

"But I can't play," he said, looking helplessly from one to the other. "I never get time to try anything like that. Boggs learned while he was a night watchman. He gets all day to practice. You know he's a night watchman up at the Florence."

"And you?" the voice of mamma clicked like a steel trap. The silence of the room was cold and dense, and the aristocratic girl in the corner felt her heart counter with an unspeakable horror as Belford's voice, grown suddenly harsh and raucous, said:
"Oh, I'm head waiter at the same hotel."—Chicago Record Herald.

EVEN UNTIL TO-DAY.

How Woman Has Always Evolved a Vi-tory Out of Defeat.

"Eve," growled Adam, "these ba-conits are fierce."
"Don't you like them, dear?"
"Like 'em? Huh! Not half like moth—ahem. They're hum—very hum! I wish you'd buy a cock book!"
"They say a man's soul is in his stomach, and I believe it!"
"Eve," and Adam glared, "you're the most exasperating woman I ever saw. By jing, I wish I had my rib back!"
"There you go—throwing that in my face again! Who asked you for your old rib, anyway? Weren't you just as lonesome as you could be until I came?"
"Boo-hoo!"
"Here, now—"
"Boo-hoo-hoo!"
"Aw say! Darn it, Eve—"
"Boo-hoo! I wish I w-w-was a cock!"
"Gosh-darn it all, Eve, I was just joking! Don't do that! Honest—the baconits are the best ever—and I'd eat 'em if they were like cobblestones!
I'm a chump and a fool and—"
And a benevolent old homopagosaurus looked on with a fatherly smile
while the reconciliation took place.
"Egobulus!" he ejaculated, "the woman wins with the tears of defeat!"
And she continues to do so even to this day.—San Francisco Bulletin.

A Celebrated Timekeeper.

The world's best timekeeper is said to be the electric clock in the basement of the Berlin observatory, which was installed by Prof. Foerster in 1855. It is enclosed in an air-tight glass cylinder, and has frequently run for periods of two or three months with an average daily deviation of only 15-1000ths of a second. Yet astronomers are not satisfied even with this, and efforts are continually made to secure ideal conditions for a clock
by keeping it not only in an air-tight case, but in an underground vault where neither changes of temperature nor of barometric pressure shall ever affect it.

An unsuccessful attempt was climbed over the tender into the cab and covered the engineer and fireman with revolvers. They ordered the engineer to increase speed, but to stop when they gave the signal.

Two miles beyond Seligman they ordered him to stop. Seven or eight men appeared at the spot designated as the train approached. Meanthrottle wide open and when ordered to stop was making more than a mile a minute down grade. It was impossible to stop within half a

the engineer for not stopping and slighted from the engine when it reached Washburn.

THE FIRST PRESIDENT OF CUBA.

TOMAS ESTRADA PALMA.

It is both surprising and significant that Tomas Estrada Palma should have been chosen the first president of the Cuban republic by the Cuban people. It is surprising, because other Spanish-American people have at all times favored their soldiers or rather the soldiers have favored themselves, with office, and it was hardly to have been expected that Cuba, with so many revolutionary heroes to choose from, would have departed from this custom. It is significant, because it points to a new method of government in what has for so many years been a hotbed of revolution. President Palma stands for a government of peace rather than that of the military dictator, and his selection gives promise of a strict compliance with the expectations of the United States in the government of Cuba. His announced policy is the development of the schoolhouse rather than the soldier in his native country.

It would be unfair to President Palma not to give him credit for playing an important part in the achievement of Cuban independence. During the long struggle of the ten years' war he fought in the ranks of the revolutionists, rising to the rank of general in the Cuban army, and afterwards being selected as president of the provisional government. He was later captured by the Spaniards and confined in Spain until after the close of the war. When he was finally released his estates were confiscated and he was forever banished from his native island. He settled finally in Honduras, where he married the daughter of the president of that republic and became the postmaster general in the cabinet of his father-in-law. Afterwards he removed to the United States and for 15 years conducted a school for Spanish-American boys at Central Valley, N. Y. At the breaking out of the last war in Cuba he became the head of the junta in New York city, and rendered efficient service in that capacity. His selection as president was favored by practically every Cuban general of note, prominent among his supporters being Gen. Gomez. The office came to him entirely unthought, and he will take his seat as the first chief executive of the Cuban republic with no political ties to bind him.

FIGHT FOR FREEDOM

The Long, Desperate Struggle That Brought Cuban Independence.

It began almost with the first settlement of the Spaniards in the island—some men whose names and deeds will live in Cuban history.

UBA's fight for freedom from Spanish rule may be said to have begun almost before the Dons became masters of the island. When, in 1511, the son of Columbus determined to take possession of Cuba in the name of Spain he selected Diego Velazquez to command an advance guard, as it were, of some 300 men. This force met with virtually no resistance from the natives save from one chief, Hatuey, a refugee from Hispaniola, or Hayti as now called, where he had witnessed the barbarities of the new conquerors and resented their invasion of his new home, as he, unlike the others, knew from terrible experience what a consequence to the native people. But Hatuey like many others who came after him in later years, was unsuccessful in opposing the will of the Dons, and paid for his desire for freedom with his life, being buried at the stake as a fugitive slave.

Spanish oppression and Spanish cruelty reigned in Cuba from that day until the their operations directed against the Spaniards in Cuba alone, but in every part of the western world where the Spanish flag floated.

It was not until late in the eighteenth and early in the nineteenth centuries that the people of Cuba began to think seriously of freedom, or rather of righting existing wrongs, and forcing from the mother country a more liberal form of government. England's colonies had thrown off the yoke of oppression, and the seed of freedom that had sprouted on the mainland had been carried to the island. A grievance that brought with it armed resistance came in 1796 when Spain withdrew the ship building yards army, which increased rapidly until it had reached the numbers of 50,000 men, but the ability of Spain to furnish war materials and fresh troops was greater than that of the insurgents, and the rank and file of the Cuban army began finally to tire of the struggle. From 1873 until February, 1878, the war dragged along in a desultory way, and finally ended with the peace of San Antonio which guaranteed pardon to all who had taken part in the conflict, and representation for Cuba in the Spanish cortes.

It was during this war, in 1873, that there occurred the incident of the steamer Virginius which came so near resulting in war between Spain and the United States, and which did result in some pointed correspondence between officials of the two countries, and the execution as pirates at Santiago of 53 persons.

The incidents of the last revolution that started in 1894 and led to American intervention for the pacification and liberation of the island are too well known to need any recounting here. The leaders who flocked to the Cuban standard were men who had fought for Cuban freedom from 1894-78. Jose Marti started from New York in February, 1895, Gomez, Antonio and Jose Maceo, Crombet, Cebreco, Borrero, Angel Guerra and a score of others gathered again on Cuban soil from different points to again begin the fight for Cuban freedom. In time Garcia, Roli, Rivera and others joined from Havana to reestablish them at her home ports. The industry had existed in the island from 1730, and the closing of them was bitterly resented. But Cuba at that time demanded only her rights as a loyal colony, and not the absolute freedom for which she has since fought.

During her earlier history the development of Cuba's great agricultural resources progressed but slowly. Her ports were closed to the commerce of all the world save Spain, and it was not until after circumstances which Spain had opposed for years but which finally overcame her, that the Cuban planters began to really realize the narrowness of Spanish rule. The change that began to be apparent in the colonial policies of other European nations early in the last century was not shared by Spain, who but attempted to draw the lines tighter.

This fact is evidenced by the issuance of the royal decree of May 25, 1825, defining the functions of the captain generals of Cuba, a decree which invested them with practically the powers of oriental despots, and this decree remained in force until Spain had been driven from the island.

GEN. GALIXTO GARCIA.

summer of 1898, when, with the assistance of the United States, the patriots banished their oppressors from the island forever.

Almost from the day of the Spaniards' first landing in Cuba until the signing of the peace protocol that put a stop to the war of 1898 the Dons had found it necessary to meet opposition to their reign by the use of armed force. This opposition was not at all times of sufficient vigor to be dignified by the name of revolution, but it was constant. For many years it was more of a sea fight than a land fight and was carried on by the buccaners whose object was to drive Spain from the western seas, not because they were friendly to the native Cubans, but from motives of revenge against the mother country, and as allies of other European nations at war with Spain. Nor difficulty Spain suppressed this revolt, and punished in various ways 1,346 of those convicted of participating in it, but the seed of liberty then planted resulted in later years in the patriots who fought the long ten years' war, and again those who led to ultimate victory the forces of Cuba in the last war.

The next Cuban revolution, started a year later, was led by an ex-officer in the Spanish army, Natiso Lopez. He was unsuccessful at the time, but his efforts led finally to the attempt of this government to purchase Cuba from Spain in 1898. The overtures made to the Spanish government by President Polk were of no avail, however, and Lopez continued his efforts at liberation until he was finally captured by the Spanish authorities on Cuban soil and executed in 1851.

In 1851 came both the attempt of Gen. Quitman, of Mississippi, for the invasion of Cuba, which resulted disastrously to the leaders, they being captured and executed, and the Ostend Manifesto which recommended the purchase of Cuba for $120,000,000. But this, like the previous attempt at purchase, came to naught, and the island was left to drag along in comparative peace until the breaking out of the "ten years' war" in 1895.

It was this long struggle that brought to the fore such men as Gomez, Garcia, Palma and many others destined to live in the history of the new republic as the names of Washington, Lee, Putnam and a score of others live in our own history. They are the greatest names Cubans will ever know; true patriots, who yet live to guide the young republic through its first troubled waters with the same courageous hands that taught the Cuban soldiers to march Cuban strategy and during against the heavier forces of Spain. To this list must be added that of Maceo and the others who sacrificed their lives in the last struggle for Cuban freedom, but demanded of Spain a dear price for the sacrifice.

The story of the "ten years' war" is a story of ten years of hardships and sacrifice. It brought with it the first declaration of Cuban independence, signed on October 10, 1895, and also the first election of Cuban officers including a president and vice president and the appointment of cabinet officers.

It was Carlos M. de Cespedes, at the head of 128 ill-armed men, who started this conflict, and who issued the proclamation of Cuban independence at Yara. Cespedes was a lawyer of Bayamo at the beginning of the war, but he was a natural leader of men, and soon had 15,000 men with which to oppose Spain. It was he who virtually wrote the first Cuban constitution which was promulgated at Guimaro on April 10, 1900.

For the first two years of the war success attended almost every effort of the Cuban army, which increased rapidly until it had reached the numbers of 50,000 men, but the ability of Spain to furnish war materials and fresh troops was greater than that of the insurgents, and the rank and file of the Cuban army began finally to tire of the struggle. them, and what Spain at first believed to be but the beginning of a negro riot that could be suppressed within a short time proved to be the final conflict for Cuban freedom, a conflict that has waged on sea and land for more than a century.

WRIGHT A. PATTERSON.

Havana Twice Burned. The city of Havana has twice been destroyed by fire set by French privateers. The first destruction occurred in 1592, soon after the city was founded, and to prevent a repetition of the disaster Fernando de Soto, then governor of the island, built a line of fortresses intended for the defense of the city, the Castillo de la Fuerza, but this proved ineffective, for the city was again destroyed by the French in 1551. After this the Punta and Morro fortresses were built.

AMERICA'S FIGHT FOR CUBA.

We Have Done Battle Not Only with the Sword But with the Scratching Brusk as Well.

So fresh in the minds of the American people are the events of the historic summer of 1898 that they really need no recalling at this time when the complete fruition of the objects of the struggle between the United States and Spain are now to be realized in the establishment of that independent government in Cuba which this government guaranteed when it declared the warring of the sword for the island's independence to be a part of our duty.

The destruction of our good ship Maine; the declarations and appropriations voted by congress; the mobilizing of armies and fleets; the victory of Admiral Dewey at Manila; the dispatch of troops to Santiago; our naval victory off that harbor; the fall of the city; the capture of Porto Rico, and Spain's cry for peace at almost any price, all these incidents need but a mention to recall them to the minds of the people of this country. History was never made more rapidly than it was made during that summer, and it was history of which the country and the world may well be proud in after years.

With the sword we drove Spain out of Cuba, our soldiers and sailors reaped wonderful victories in rapid succession, but Spain left behind her a harder struggle than her armies or her fleets had given us—it was with dirt and disease.

How well Gov. Gen. Wood has conquered this foe is evidenced from the health reports from Cuba. First at Santiago, and later throughout all the island he has persistently fought the battle for clean cities and good sanitation until today Havana, instead of being the breeding ground of all the various types of malignant fever, is considered as healthful as almost any city in the United States. He has taught to the Cubans the necessity of cleanliness, a lesson they are not likely to soon forget.

He has done more than this. He has opened the public schools, and has so extended the system that practically all the children of school age have now offered them the advantages of an education, and has instilled in the hearts of the people a desire for learning, a desire which their own government will now be in a position to fulfill.

Gen. Wood, as the representative of the American people, has built a government of the people, for the people and by the people of Cuba into whose hands our country can now safely place the reins of control, and Gen. Wood's name must be added to the list of Cuban heroes whose memories will long live in the hearts of the people of "the ever faithful Isle."

FACTS ABOUT CUBA.

Cuba contained at the time of the breaking out of the last revolution 100,000 farms, ranches and plantations, valued at $200,000,000.

Not less than five minor revolts occurred in Cuba between 1875, the date of closing the "ten years' war," and 1894 when the last war began.

From 1827 to 1864 Cuba contributed directly to the Spanish treasury the sum of $89,000,000. Since 1867 the island has contributed but little directly to the Madrid treasury, but indirectly much of the entire revenue of the island has reached Spain.

From the eastern end of Cuba to Hayti is 54 miles, and to Jamaica 85 miles; from the northern shore on the western end it is 90 miles to Florida, and from Cape San Antonio, the western extremity of the island, to Yucatan is 130 miles.

Cuba is nearly seven times as long as Long Island. It stretches from a point about even with New York City on the east to Cincinnati on the west, a distance of 750 miles. In width it is nowhere greater than 100 miles, while at places it is as narrow as 20 miles. There are 1,300 small islands and keys adjacent to and belonging to Cuba, and these, with the main island, comprise an area of about 45,000 square miles.

Cuba had at the close of the war with Spain about 1,000 miles of railway divided into a number of small lines. Since the evacuation of the island by Spain Sir William Van Van Horne, the builder of the Canadian Pacific railway, has been building a new trunk line that, when completed, will traverse the island from one end to the other, and with its various branches, will comprise more than another thousand miles of railway line. The main line of this road from Santiago to Nipe, in Santa Clara province, is now nearing completion, and will be opened to traffic in the early summer, and the remainder of the system will be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible. The older lines of railway are practically all in the western portion of the island, and several of them center at Havana, or connect with Havana.

"The Ever Faithful Isle." Cuba has been known the world over as "The Ever Faithful Isle," a name it received at the time the Spanish Bourbons were deposed by Napoleon in 1808. At that time each member of the provincial Cuban council took an oath to preserve the island for its legitimate sovereign. The island contributed voluntarily $5,000,000 to the Spanish treasury during the Napoleonic wars, and declared war against France for deposing the Spanish sovereign. For such fidelity the Cuban people were rewarded by having taken away from them the rights of their provincial council, and imposing upon them a line of captain generals whose despotic rule continued down to the day this country wrested the colony from the hands of the Dons.

Captured by Morgan. The buccaner Morgan captured and plundered Havana in 1690, just previous to his exploit at Panama and along the Pacific coast of Central and South America.

A Great Cuban Disaster. One of the greatest disasters in Cuban history was the hurricane of October 14, 1870, in which some 2,000 lives were lost.

THE CUBAN FLAG.

It was under this banner, which is now to represent the youngest of the world's nations, that the Cuban patriots fought and died for many years in the long struggle for freedom. It has led them on to victory in many a hard-fought battle, and it will be a proud day for these patriotic veterans when they see that emblem floating from the flagstaffs of the government buildings, and hear the roar of the cannon of foreign warships in the harbor as they pay tribute to the glory of that new nation of which the Cuban people have so long dreamed. It is this emblem that will replace the stars and stripes over all the government buildings in Cuba on May 20, and as it is set floating from the flagstaffs it will be greeted with a national salute from the batteries of American artillery on shore, and from the American and other national warships in the harbor. "Long may it wave over a land of the free and a home of the brave," is the wish of every American.

RESOURCES OF CUBA

Her Greatest Wealth Lies in a Fertile and Productive Soil.

Possibilities of Sugar and Tobacco Cultivation Judged by the Records of the Past—Valuable Woods, Fruits and Minerals.

URING years of peace in the past Cuba has produced more cane sugar than any other country in the world. She produces more than twice the cane sugar manufactured in Java, her nearest competitor, and more than five times as much as is produced in any other country. In exceptional years her production of sugar has passed the one million ton mark.

The beet and cane product both considered, Cuba is surpassed by but one country, Germany, with one and one-half million tons, as a sugar producer, and is equaled by but one other, Austria.

Cuba has exported in one year more than 8,000,000 pounds of leaf tobacco, and more than 134,000,000 cigars in addition to heavy exports of baled tobacco of less valuable varieties.

The shipping of nine Cuban ports, which includes Havana, for the year 1894 amounted to 3,338,539 tons, carried by 3,184 vessels.

The above three paragraphs give a general idea of industrial Cuba of the past; they can scarcely be classed as even prophetic of the future.

Cuba and the adjacent small islands belonging to it occupy an area of 45,000 square miles—a little less in size than the state of New York. Of this total area less than 10 per cent. has ever been under cultivation; four per cent. is classed as forest land, and large quantities of the remainder is virgin soil awaiting development by a progressive people under a progressive government.

When such a people under such a government have turned this unclaimed area into productive territory we shall have the Cuba of the future.

But to go back again to the Cuba of the past. Cane sugar development has been confined to the vast central plain lying to a great extent in Matanzas province. In the season of 1892-93 this great plain yielded 1,054,212 tons of sugar, valued at $80,000,000. The sugar plantations of this territory vary in extent from 100 to 1,000 acres, and employ an average of one man to each two acres under cultivation.

For several years the sugar industry in all the West Indian islands has been in a deplorable condition, but different causes must be assigned for the condition in Cuba than for the other islands. In Cuba it has been the series of rebellions and insurrections that have caused the decline of the industry. During the periods of comparative peace the industry has prospered, and the reason may be found in the fact that the Cuban planters have gone about the production of sugar on a large scale, and equipped with the most modern machinery.

While sugar is the staple crop of first importance in Cuba tobacco has an important place in the island's industries, and is even more valuable than sugar when the acreage under cultivation is considered. As Matanzas is the center of the sugar industry so is Pinar del Rio the center of the tobacco industry.

A Year of Cuban Prosperity. The year 1892 was the most prosperous in Cuban history for almost half a century. During that year the value of the island's exports amounted to $89,500,000, and the imports to $56,250,000. Of the exports $85,000,000 were classed as vegetable, $3,500,000 as mineral and $50,000 as animal.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S PALACE AT HAVANA.

This is the white house of Cuba. In it have resided a long list of Spanish governors, and for nearly four years it has been the official home of Gen. Leonard Wood. When he surrenders the reins of government into the hand of President Palma he will also step out of this famous official residence and turn it over to the family of the first president of the Cuban republic. The palace is a substantial building of masonry thoroughly in keeping with the Spanish tendency toward extravagance, and will make an elaborate residence for Cuba's executives.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

FOR CONGRESS.

We are authorized to announce
OLLIE M. JAMES

a candidate to represent the First District of Kentucky in Congress, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

Vote May 24

Vote Saturday, May 24

Vote for Ollie James May 24

Mr. Crossland does really need more time—to defend that corner.

No man stands higher as a citizen, a lawyer and Democrat than Ollie James in Crittenden county.

Attend the Democratic primary Saturday May 24th. Vote for the man whom you think will best represent the district.

Since issuing that circular Sam Crossland does find that it takes considerable time to get acquainted with the loyal, fair Democrats of this district.

When the editor of the Mayfield Messenger was talking yesterday in 1896, Ollie James was advocating the new declaration of independence. It is not strange that the Messenger is fighting James now.

In 1896, 1899 and 1901 the Democrats were anxious for an introduction to all the speakers of the party. In fact, they kept open house most of the time, but Sam Crossland had other business and treated the invitations with ponderous silence.

The chairman of the Democratic county committee, and the Democrats who elected, then will please stand up and be abused by Mr. Crossland and Jim Lemon while those who bolted Bryan and Beckham will please walk in and name Mr. Crossland as the party nominee for congress.

The Democrat committee of Trigg county selected its primary election officers a few days ago and Messrs. Crossland and his Mayfield Messenger proceeded to their usual avocation of abusing and denouncing the honest Democrats of Trigg county. It seems that Mr. Crossland believes that everybody who does not look through his glasses is dishonest.

I am your champion, your guide, your defender and your good angel in 1902, is the valiant and bold announcement of Mr. Crossland, as he casts his eyes upon the seat in congress, soon to be vacated by Charlie Wheeler. The people are wanting to know where Sam was during the trying times of the few years just past, when hard fighting obscured the cushioned seat of a congressman.

Ollie James was born and reared a Democrat and has been an ardent, working Democrat ever since he was eighteen years old. He did not wait until he wanted an office before taking the stump. His appreciation of the doctrine of the party does not rise and fall with the appearance or disappearance of an office. At all times, in the day of party success, in the hour of gloom, he has stood aloof in the faith and active in the work, and his ability as a campaigner has been time and again recognized by the older, honored and trusted leaders of the party; he has been staunch and strong in councils that shaped the policies of his party; he has not stood aloof wavering in the hour of uncertainty, but having a true conception of Democratic doctrine, he has never hesitated to declare himself.

CLOSING EXERCISES

Of The School—Large Audience in Attendance.

The commencement exercises of the school were held Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings at the opera house. The house was filled to overflowing each night, and on Saturday evening many were turned away, and standing room was at a premium. Over eight hundred people witnessed the delightful exercises of the high school graduates Saturday evening.

Thursday evening seventeen young ladies and gentlemen of the common school class entertained a most appreciative audience. Friday evening the remaining common school graduates appeared before the footlights. The orations on both evenings were splendid. The subjects were all interesting, and the large audiences were most appreciative. Mr. Eugene Joiner, the valedictorian of the class, paid Miss Alice Browning, the eighth grade instructor, a beautiful and highly deserved tribute. For years Miss Browning has had charge of the common school department, and under her instruction over two hundred young ladies and gentlemen have labored faithfully and secured the common school diploma. She is one of the most competent as well as one of the most successful teachers in western Kentucky.

Saturday evening the high school graduates rendered a highly entertaining program, consisting of two plays. "A Shakespearean Conference," a comedy, was the opening feature.

This scene was pathetic and the rendition was exquisite. In both plays the young graduates displayed dramatic powers of extraordinary merit. The evening's entertainment was beyond doubt one of the most enjoyable affairs ever held in the opera house, and the fashionable audience left the house highly pleased.

The exercises closed with the valedictory address, delivered by Miss Estelle Walker. Prof. Chas. Evans, the man who has served as principal of the school since its organization, over eight years ago, was spoken of in words of the warmest commendation by the young lady.

Another feature of the evening was the presentation of an elegant gold medal given by cashier Ed. Hayward, of the Farmers Bank, to the pupil of the eighth grade making the highest grade in the examination. The prize was awarded to Miss Mildred Haynes, the accomplished little daughter of Mr. H. A. Haynes. Mr. W. H. Clark presented the medal to the young lady.

Another feature of the exercises must not be overlooked. The music by Scriber's orchestra, of Evansville added much to the pleasure of the occasion. The orchestra is composed of talented musi-

The closing exercises were the most brilliant in the history of the institution, and pleasant memories of those closing days will long be cherished by the vast audiences who attended the entertainments, as well as by the graduates who participated in the exercises.

A GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Efforts Being Made to Induce the Interior Department to Undertake It.

The very great importance which this district is assuming in the production of mineral has attracted the attention of the United States Geological Survey people, and a movement is being made to have a resurvey and classification of our ore bearing strata by this high authority.

Mr. E. O. Ulrich, a member of this department and the gentleman to whom the district is indebted for the very complete mineral map which most of us find invaluable in prospect work, addressed the following letter to one of our citizens who is very closely identified in the production of both zinc ore and fluor spar.

"Department of the Interior, United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C., May 6—Dear Sir: Your favor of May 1st has just come to hand. "I have talked the matter over with the Assistant Director regarding the resurvey of your county and the confirmation of statements made in 1884 regarding the mineral bearing zone which seems in many cases to have been confirmed, and he thinks if your public spirited citizens will contribute a portion of the expense and offer it through some official of the county to the U. S. Geological Survey, the latter may allot an equal sum for geological work in your county.

"If this can not be done, it is scarcely likely that the U. S. Geological Survey can reach your territory for several years to come. This country of ours is a great one and we are under continued pressure for survey work in all parts of it. Those parts, however, that have to bear part of the expense have, of course, taken precedence, and must continue to do so, since the Survey is after the greatest result possible with the sum appropriated by Congress.

By this sort of co-operation the capacity of the Survey is about doubled, while the co-operating territories receive prompt attention and better work, for half what it would cost if undertaken separately.

"I fear that it is a little late to perfect plans for work this year, but if your people are in earnest they should get together at once and communicate with the Director of the U. S. Geological Survey.

"Respectfully yours,
"E. O. Ulrich"

Inquiry has been made of the Department as to what amount of money it will be necessary for our people to raise to have this very important work carried forward. As soon as a reply is received the Press will again mention the subject and request immediate action.

A song borne in the wings of some dear old melody, a joke rippling from a fountain of humor, a subtle note of pathos, awakening tender, sacred memories—that is Bob Taylor's lecture. Words painted in all the colors of fancy and put together with all the skill of faultless diction, the lights of innocent childhood, and the shadows of sombre age developed on the background of common experience—that is Bob Taylor's lecture. A radiant smile penetrating the gloom of despondency, a ray of hope arched in every man's horizon, a fragrant flower to brighten and to cheer—that is Bob Taylor's lecture.

It is always best to tell the following story just before the strawberry season opens: An old parson, who loved the good things of this world, as all good parsons ought, was gazing fondly at some beautiful specimens of this luscious fruit; piercing one with the silver tine of his berry fork he lifted it up, looked upon it lovingly and said: "God might have made a better berry than the strawberry, but doubtless God never did."

The Marion high school work of the year blossomed and crystallized in last week's commencement exercises. There's something superb in the entire tone and make-up of this large body of young ladies and gentlemen. From the youngest to the eldest but one thought seems to prevail, that of entire, unswerving loyalty to their alma mater.

A special issue of the Crittenden Press will shortly be published for circulation here and abroad. It will contain a very full and complete description of our mineral field, rather profusely illustrated by half tone etchings, from photographs made by Mr. Ringo. The business street of Marion, as well as a birdseye view of the city will give the reader a splendid idea of this growing gateway to the treasures of Western Kentucky. The handsome village of Salem, surrounded by its broad and fertile acres, under which are found the ores that is making a record in the smelters of the North. Smithland, crowning its high bluff and standing guard over the commerce that is constantly moving on the surface of the Ohio and the Cumberland. Lola, a center of mining activity. Fredonia, one of the outposts of the treasure field will all be represented in these half tones. The financial, commercial, professional and religious field will have its due share of space. Stories of enterprise and industry that has led to wealth will be told graphically and illustrated by etchings of men who tell the story. Mr. W. C. Uren will tell about his fifty odd years in the zinc fields as prospector, miner and ore buyer. His hints on how to prospect for zinc ores in this section will prove very valuable to every one interested. The members of the Ladies Clubs will be handsomely grouped and their faces will add beauty to the broad pages. The professions will be duly represented, the medical fraternity will talk about the healthfulness of this charming section. The clergymen will give us a record of their hopes and fears, their growing congregations and handsome churches. Much space will be given to the many mining properties throughout the entire section. The way of working, dressing and shipping the ores will be photographed and reproduced. The production of tobacco, wheat and corn will be tabulated and compared. The growth of the freight and passenger traffic will be touched upon. The handsome stores and enterprising merchants of the places mentioned will receive due attention. Many thousand copies of this issue will be needed for circulation North, South, East and West. It will be a handsome publication, fully up to the merits of even so great a mining field as Western Kentucky. All subscribers to the Press will receive this special issue free. Extra copies may be ordered now, the price being 10 cents each.

Marion Milling Company Starts Their Big Mill.

The Marion Milling Company now have their big mill in East Marion, in operation. This plant has been closed down since December. New machinery has been placed on every floor of the spacious building. Two big engines, one of eighty horse power and one of one hundred horse power have been put in. The machinery was secured from Nor dyke & Morman, of Indianapolis, and is of the finest make. A costly swing sifter bolting system has been added. In fact the mill is new from engine room to loft, and the system is modern in every detail. The capacity is one hundred and fifty barrels daily.

The flour manufactured is of the highest grade. The Elk brand, the finest patent, has no superior.

Mr. A. Dewey is the head miller, and Mr. D. B. Kevil is the general manager. The City Mills property of the Marion Milling Company will be idle for several weeks.

The Marion Milling Company is one of the largest and strongest business firms in Western Kentucky and commands a most extensive patronage.

THE MAN BEHIND THE PICK.

There has been all kinds of gush about the man who is "the pick." And the man behind the cannon has been toasted, fêted and dined. There's the man behind the musket, and the man behind the fever. And the man behind the whiskers, and the man behind the boots. And the man behind the plow beam, and the man behind the bar. And the man behind the ballot, and the man behind the dough. And the man behind the counter, and the man behind the bill. And the man behind the pestle, and the man behind the pill. And the man behind the jimmy, and the man behind the bars. And the man behind the stage, and the man behind the stars. And the man behind the kisser, and the man behind the list. And the man behind the bottle, and when they were short of men. There was some small rhymester warbled of the man behind the pen. But they missed one longest fellow, and I'm missing a kink. That they didn't make a mention of the man behind the pick.

Up the rugged mountain side a thousand feet he takes his way. Or as far into the darkness from the cheering light of day. He is shut out from the sunlight in the glimmer of the lamp. He is cut off from the world in the sickly fumes of a lamp. He must look in every position, he must take his life in hand. For he works in deadly peril but but few can stand it. But he does it in silence and he seldom makes a kink. Which is why I sing the praises of the man behind the pick.

My Strangest Case

CHAPTER III.—CONTINUED.

He had scarcely gone before one of my clerks entered the room and handed me a card. On it was printed the name of Mr. Edward Hayley, and in the left-hand bottom corner was the announcement that he was the managing director of the Santa Cruz Mining company of Forzoda in the Argentine Republic.

"Show the gentleman in, Walters," I said.

In a few minutes a tall, handsome man, irreproachably turned out, entered the office. He seated himself in a chair the clerk placed for him, put his hat and umbrella on another, and then turned to me.

"My card has made you familiar with my name, Mr. Fairfax," he began, "and doubtless, if you are at all familiar with mines and mining, you are acquainted with the name of the company I have the honor to represent."

"I am very much afraid the mining market does not possess very much interest for me," I replied. "I have to work so hard for my money, that when I have got it I prefer to invest it in something a little more reliable. May I inquire the nature of your business with me?"

"I have come to see you, Mr. Fairfax," he said, speaking very impressively, and regarding me deliberately as he did so, "on rather a delicate subject. Before I explain what it is, may I ask that you will treat what I am about to tell you as purely confidential?"

"My business is invariably a confidential one," I answered for the second time in two days. "I venture to think that this room has heard more secrets than almost any other in England. But though they say walls have ears, I have never heard it said that they have tongues."

"It is sometimes a good thing that they have not," he replied. "And now let me tell you what business has brought me here. In the first place, if you do not already know it, I may say that the company I represent is an exceedingly wealthy one, and as our business lies a long way from Threadneedle street, if I may so put it, it is necessary for us to trust very largely to the honesty of our employees on the other side of the world. Of course we make all sorts of inquiries about them prior to engaging their services, and it is also needless to say that we keep a sharp eye on them when they have entered our employ. Nevertheless, it is quite possible, all precautions notwithstanding, for an unscrupulous man to take advantage of us. As a matter of fact, this is what has happened, and what has also brought me to you. For some considerable time past we have had our suspicions that our manager at the mines has been in league with a notorious rascal in New York. In proof of this, I might say that our returns have shown a decided falling off, while our manager has, so we have lately discovered, within the past year become rich enough to purchase property to a considerable extent in the United States. Unfortunately for us, owing to a lack of direct evidence, we are unable to bring his defalcations home to him, though of course we are as certain of our facts as we can well be of anything."

"I think I understand," I said.

"Your business with me is to endeavor or to induce me to go out to the Argentine and make inquiries on your behalf with the idea of bringing this man to book. Is that not so?"

"That is my errand," he replied, gravely. "If you care to undertake the task, we, on our side, and I speak as the mouthpiece of the company, will be prepared to pay you very high terms for your services, in point of fact, almost what you may ask in reason. The matter, as you may suppose, is a most serious one for us, and every day's delay is adding to it. May I ask what your terms would be, and when would you be prepared to start?"

"Your offer is a most liberal one," I said. "Unfortunately, however, I fear there is a considerable difficulty in the way of my accepting it."

"A difficulty?" he exclaimed, raising his eyebrows as if in astonishment. "But surely that obstacle can be removed. Especially for an offer of such magnitude as we are prepared to make you?"

"Excuse me," I said, somewhat tartly, "but, however great the inducement may be, I never break faith with my clients. The fact of the matter is, only yesterday I promised to undertake another piece of business, which, while not being so remunerative, perhaps, as that you are now putting before me, means a very great deal to those who are, for the time being, my employers."

"Would it be important on my part to ask at what time yesterday afternoon you arrived at this momentous decision?"

"Shortly after four o'clock," I answered, but not without a little undercurrent as to his reason for putting the question. For my own part I did not see what it had to do with the matter in hand.

"Dear me, how very vexing, to be sure!" he observed. "This is certainly another instance of the contrariety of fate."

"How so?" I asked.

"Because it was my intention to have called upon you shortly after lunch yesterday on this matter," he answered. "Unfortunately I was prevented at the last moment. Had I been able to get here, I should be pleased to show them to you if you would."

"If it is necessary for me to go at once, I fear it is," I answered. "But if it would be of any use to you, I could send you a most trustworthy subordinate; one who would be quite capable of undertaking the work, and who would give you every satisfaction."

"I fear that would not be the same thing," he said. "My firm has such implicit faith in you that they would not entertain the idea of anyone else going. Now think, Mr. Fairfax, for a moment. If you are prepared to go, I, in my turn, on behalf of my company, am prepared to offer you your expenses and a sum of £5,000. You need not be away more than three months at longest, so that you see our offer is at the rate of £20,000 a year. It is princely remuneration."

I looked at him closely. It was plain that he was in earnest—in deadly earnest, so it seemed. Even a defaultering manager would scarcely send to warrant so much zeal.

"I am very much flattered by your offer," I said; "and believe me, I most truly appreciate the generosity of your company; but, as I said before, if it is necessary for me to go at once, that is to say, before I have completed my present case, then I have no option but to most reluctantly decline."

"Perhaps you will think it over," he continued, "and let me know, say to-morrow?"

"No amount of thinking it over will induce me to alter my decision," I replied. "You must see for yourself that I have no right to accept a retainer from one party and then throw them over in order to favor another. That would not only be a dishonorable action on my part, but would be bad from a business point of view. No, Mr. Hayley, I am exceedingly sorry, but I have no option but to act as I am doing."

"In that case I must wish you a very good morning," he remarked, and took up his hat and umbrella. I could see, however, that he was still reluctant to go.

"Good morning," I answered. "I hope your affairs in the Argentine may brighten before very long."

He shook his head gloomily, and then left the office without another word.

When he had gone I answered I some letters, gave some instructions to my managing clerk, and then donned my hat and set off for the office of the shipping company that had brought tidings Hayley to England.

Unfortunately it transpired that they were not in a position to do very much in the way of helping me. Mr. Bertram had certainly traveled home in one of their steamers, so the manager informed me, a boat that as a rule did not carry passengers. He had landed at the docks, and from that moment they had neither seen nor heard anything of him. I inquired for the steamer, only to learn that she was now somewhere on her way between Singapore and Hong-Kong. This was decidedly disappointing, but as most of the cases I had have been ultimately successful I did not take it too seriously to heart. Leaving the shipping office, I next turned my attention to Halton Garden, where I called upon Messrs. Jacob and Bulenhill, one of the largest firms in the gem trade. We had had many dealings together in the past, and as I had had the good fortune on one occasion to do them a signal service, I knew that they would now do all that they could for me in return.

"Good day, Mr. Fairfax," said the chief partner, as I entered his snug little sanctum, which leads out of the main office. "What can I have the pleasure of doing for you?"

"I am in search of some information," I replied, "and I think you may be able to help me."

"I will do all that is in my power to render you assistance," he returned, as he wiped his glasses and placed them on his somewhat fleshy nose. "What is the information you require? Has there been another big robbery of stones, and you think it possible that some of them may have come into our hands?"

"There certainly has been a robbery," I replied, "and the stones may have been offered to you, but not in the way you mean. The fact of the matter is, I want to discover whether or not a large consignment of uncut stones and sapphires of great value have been placed upon the market within the last two months."

"Un-cut rubies and sapphires are being continually placed upon the market," he observed, leaning back in his chair and rattling his keys.

"But not such stones as those I am looking for," I said, and furnished him with the rough weights that had been supplied to me.

"This is interesting—decidedly interesting," he remarked. "Especially since it serves to offer an explanation on a certain matter which we have been interested in for some little time past. On the 16th of last month, a gentleman called upon us here, who stated that he had lately returned from the far east. He had had, so he declared, the good fortune to discover a valuable mine, the locality of which he was most careful not to disclose. He thereupon showed my partner and myself ten stones, consisting of five rubies and five sapphires, each of which weighed between 55 and 60 carats."

"And you purchased them?"

"We did, and for a very heavy sum. I can assure you the vendor was very well aware of their value, as we soon discovered, and he was also a good hand at a bargain. Would you care to see the stones? I shall be pleased to show them to you if you would."

"I should like to see them immensely," I replied.

Thereupon he crossed the room to a safe in the corner, and, when he had unlocked it, took from it a wash-leather bag. Presently ten superb gems were lying before me on the table.

"There they are," he said, waving his hands towards them, "and, as you can see for yourself, they are worthy of being set in the crown of an emperor. It is not often that we are enthusiastic in such matters, but in this case we have very good reason to be. When they are properly cut, they will be well-nigh priceless."

"Do you happen to know whether he sold any more of a similar kind in London?" I asked, as he returned them to their place in the safe.

"I know that he sold 15 smaller ones to Henderson & Soll, and three almost as large as those I have just shown you to a firm in Amsterdam."

"If he is the man I want to get hold of, that accounts for 28," I said, making a note of the fact as I spoke. "Originally he had 93 in his possession."

"Ninety-three?" the merchant replied, as if he could scarcely believe

TEN SUPERB GEMS WERE LYING BEFORE ME.

his ears. "Why, his mine must be a source of unlimited wealth. I wish I had known this before."

"So do I," I said. "And now perhaps you can go further and furnish me with a description of the man himself. I should then be able to tell you whether my gentleman and your customer are one and the same person."

"I can describe him to you perfectly well. He was tall, but somewhat sparely built, very sunburnt—which would be accounted for by his long residence in the east—his hair was streaked with gray, he had dark eyes, and a singularly sharp nose."

"Did he wear a beard?"

"No, only a mustache. The latter was carefully trimmed, and, I think, waxed. Of this, however, I am not quite certain."

"And his name?"

"He would not tell us that. We pressed him to disclose it, but he obstinately refused to do so. He said that if his name became known it might lead to the discovery of his mine, and that he was naturally anxious that such an event should not occur."

time, and you may be sure have made the closest inquiries. Besides, there are such few stones in Europe, and what there are are safely in the possession of their owners. Surely you are not going to tell me that they were stolen?"

In the man's voice there was a perceptible note of alarm.

"I don't think you need be afraid," I said. "They were stolen by the man from his two partners, and all they want is to get hold of him in order to make him disgorge their share of what he got for them."

"I am glad indeed to hear that," was the reply. "I was beginning to grow uneasy. And now is there any other way in which I can serve you? If so, I shall be only too pleased to do it."

I informed him that if I had anything else to ask him I would end upon him again, and then took my departure. While I was in a great measure satisfied with the information I had gained, I was not altogether easy in my mind. The question to be answered was, was the man I was after the same individual who had sold Jacob and Bulenhill the stones? The description given me varied in several particulars to that furnished me by Kitchener. My agent declared him to possess black hair; the merchant had said gray, the one had declared that Hayley possessed a beard, the other that he had only a waxed mustache. The figure, however, was in both cases identically the same.

Having satisfied myself that he had no more to tell me, I thanked him for his courtesy and left the office. A fresh idea had occurred to me which I thought might lead to something, and I resolved to put it into practice without any further waste of time.

DOCTORS HAVE TROUBLES.

Some of Which May Be Avoided by a Judicious Use of Discretion.

As a rule you can never take a woman at her word. A Louisville woman and her husband went on east for recuperation. It was their intention of interviewing a leading physician before they came back in order to get his opinion of the wife's health. She had been far from well, and finally concluded nothing would satisfy her but the verdict of this medical celebrity, relates the Louisville Times.

Accordingly, husband and wife, accompanied by appointment upon this specialist. "Now, doctor," said the woman, "I want your honest opinion. I like candor and don't wish to make the trip here to be told any falsehood about myself."

This sounded very open and courageous, so the expert went to work. He looked at her well, asked questions, made a minute examination of the case and finally inquired: "Did any doctor ever tell you had so and so?"

"Only one, the horrid brute," was the reply. "I have been to ten or twelve, and he was the only one who was so ignorant and rude as to tell me such a thing, and I discharged him at once."

"Discharged him?" exclaimed the expert. "Why, madam, he was the only one of the lot who told you the truth!"

Speaking of Wet Blankets.

When a miserable, selfish, unsociable person joins a party and puts a damper upon their spirits he is described as a "wet blanket." Literally, however, a wet blanket can do far more than put a stop to mirth. In the days of the old muskets the Indians of North America used them to stop the flight of bullets. This is hardly to be believed, but it is said that the Mexicans were once defeated by this ploy. Their general was trying to put down a rising of Yaquis. At first he was amused to see the Indians advance under cover of their blankets, held up like shields. Finding that their progress was not stopped by his men's fire, he was at last forced to retreat, but not till the Yaquis, in their turn, had poured into his ranks a terrible fire at close quarters. The Indians, it was thought, had found out by accident that a wet blanket, when held up clear of the ground—allowed to hang, so to speak, as on a clothes line—could not be pierced by a bullet. Dry blankets were useless, and of course wet blankets would also be useless against the rifles and bullets of the present day.—Chicago Tribune.

King Oscar Asks Stranger to Lunch.

A more simple and homely king than the king of Sweden it is impossible to find. M. Gaston Bonnier, the celebrated botanist, tells of how once, when he was botanizing near Stockholm, he met a stranger similarly occupied. The two botanists fraternized, and M. Bonnier suggested that they should lunch together at an inn. "No; come home and lunch with me instead," said the stranger, leading the way towards the palace gates. M. Bonnier was naturally astonished, but his new acquaintance was most apologetic. "I'm sorry," he said, "but I happen to be the king of this country, and this is the only place I've got to entertain anybody in." So they went in and lunched, and talked botany together all the afternoon.—Chicago Tribune.

Would add to the comfort of many country residences which have hitherto been compelled to forego the comfort of using gas by the fact that they were using any gas company. The Khotal is just the stove each people need. It is a gas range, but generates its own gas from ordinary kerosene and then burns it without smell, smoke, or soot. It can be regulated to any desired temperature, occupies very little room, and can be moved from place to place if desired. The price ranges from $25.75 upwards, and the cost of running is extremely small. Send stamp for catalogue and learn how little it will cost to run your kitchen comfortably during the hot weather.

JAILER TRAVIS

Has Something to Say About Vick's Escape.

The PRESS of last week contained an article in regard to J. A. Vick escaping from the Crittenden country jail. I now desire to make some corrections as to how he made his escape.

I was helping the prisoners to scour the jail. I went into the jail where the prisoners were at work, closed the door behind me but failed to lock it. The key was left in the outside part of the jail door. As soon as I passed Vick he in an instant made a rush for the door. I heard the lock click, and turning saw Vick making his escape. He had closed the door and took the key with him, but when he jumped over the fence into Mr Crawford's yard, he threw the key down. The key was found and brought back, the jail door unlocked, and I was released. In the meantime some ten or twelve men were pursuing Vick but failed to capture him until he reached Carversville. I had offered a reward of twenty-five dollars for his arrest; he was arrested by Vick Bridges. I paid the reward and Vick was placed in jail. Another warrant was issued for Vick by the county judge, charging him with escaping from an officer, and his bond fixed at $100. He has so far failed to fill either bond. I think I was reasonably careful and believe most any jailer would have done just what I did. The lock was not cut out of the jail door.

Summer Friendships.

Friendship is "for serene days and country rambles," and for rough weather and hard roads as well, if it is friendship at all. The word is only too often abused. Choosing friends should not be a mere accident, or because people are in the same hotel in the summer, or because they meet somewhere in traveling, or are thrown together in country pastimes. Of course it does not follow that a friend may not be found in summer, and it is a great pleasure when one can add a kindred spirit to the number of one's friends. The responsibilities of parents in regard to their daughters' acquaintances during the summer season is the subject of a thoughtful chapter in the June Delinquent, under the head of Social Observances, in which certain general principles of good form are laid down which will be of service to every reader.

A HORRIBLE HOLOGOUST

Forty Thousand People Killed by A Rain of Fire.

St. Thomas, D. W. I., May 9.—The commander of the French cruiser Suchet states that at 1 o'clock Thursday the entire town of St. Pierre was wrapped in flames. He endeavored to save some thirty persons, more or less burned. They saw heaps of bodies on the wharves and it is believed that not a soul in St. Pierre escaped.

Washington, D. C. May 9.—The following cablegram has just been received at the State Department:

Point A-Pitre, May 9.—At 7 o'clock Thursday morning, a storm of steam, mud and fire enveloped the city and community of St. Pierre. Not more than twenty persons escaped. Eighteen vessels were burned and sunk, with all on board, including four American vessels. The United States consul and family are among the lost.

A second dispatch confirms the report of the destruction of St. Pierre and environs and shipping by a reign of fire, and "the whole population was annihilated with the exception of some twenty. Over 40,000 perished. The Mount Pelee volcano ejected molten rock and ashes during three minutes, and completely destroyed every living creature within a four mile radius.

St. Thomas, May 9.—The British schooner Ocean Traveler, of St. Johns, N. B., arrived at the Island of Dominica, British West Indies, this afternoon, she was obliged to flee from the island of St. Vincent, British West Indies, during the afternoon of May 7th, in consequence of a heavy fall of sand from a volcano which was in eruption there. The schooner arrived opposite St. Pierre May 8th. While about a mile off the volcano of St. Pelee exploded and fire from it swept the whole town of St. Pierre, destroying the town and shipping there.

St. Pierre and Martinique are no strangers to destructive earthquakes and volcanoes.

In August, 1767, an earthquake killed 1600 people in St. Pierre. In 1851 Mt. Pelee, an active volcano, threatened the city with destruction.

Earthquakes involving the loss of life have been frequent in the history of the West Indies.

Lost Hair

"My hair came out by the handful, and the gray hairs began to creep in. I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, and it stopped the hair from coming out and restored the color."—Mrs. M. D. Gray, No. Salem, Mass.

There's a pleasure in offering such a preparation as Ayer's Hair Vigor. It gives to all who use it such satisfaction. The hair becomes thicker, longer, softer, and more glossy. And you feel so secure in using such an old and reliable preparation.

Obituary.

"There is a reaper whose name is Death
And with his sickle keen,
He cuts the bearded grain at a breath
And the flowers that grow between."

On the 26th of April, 1902, the Death Angel entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. V. Matlock and took from it its fairest flower, little Marian Eloise.

Since she was given to them on June 13, 1901, around her fragile form has centered all the ambition and affection of devoted parents towards an only and much loved child. The flame of her young life was ever weak, and as they watched it with the greatest eagerness and hope, it flickered and faded away.

Every care and loving attention was lavished upon her during her stay here of nine months and seven-enteen days. But all these availed not, for the Father came in pity and love and transplanted the tiny bud to his garden above.

It seems rude that this sweet babe should be snatched from the bosom of its agonizing mother, for the cold, dark tomb's embrace, yet God knew best. Death came with friendly care ere she knew the blight of sin and sorrow, and safe in the arms of Him who said "Suffer little children to come unto me," she will be the bright star to beckon the parents ever to that better home.

Sorrowing mother and father do not grieve for little Marian; your lives have been made purer and sweeter by the little life entrusted to your care; your hearts have been closer knit together by the common love and suffering.

"To you the child was only lent,
While mortal it was thine;
The child, tho' dead, is yet alive,
And lives forever mine."

A. F.

Obituary.

Little Joel Frazer Fritts, son of Hodge and Lou Fritts, was born Oct. 27th, 1901, died April 24th, 1902.

This precious, sweet little babe was a great sufferer for several weeks and all that a faithful and skillful physician and loving friend could do was done, yet the death angel came and took this dear little one from the world of disease and death to live with God and the angels in the sweet by and by. Jesus said, Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven, and may father, mother, brothers and sister be prepared to meet their precious young one in the bright world above, where parting will be no more is the earnest prayer of the writer.

The funeral services by the writer at Crooked Creek church after which we laid away this precious little jewel to rest in the cemetery at that place till the resurrection morn.
